In this study, we investigated the nature of water at high pressure with the aim of elucidating the effects of the high pressure on water. For this purpose, we performed first-principles molecular dynamics simulations for a pressure range up to 2.7GPa and analyzed the simulations at a microscopic level. Our results provide the following fundamental findings: (1) The dominant contribution to the pressure-induced water structure change is due to a structural reorganization of the hydrogen-bonding network. (2) The change in the hydrogen-bonding network is driven by two factors: (a) the orientation of the hydrogen-bond direction, and (b) the local free volume. (3) At high pressures, water is highly porous with high free volume, which is consistent with the fact that water is found in the liquid state.
