Deejaysystem Video Vj2 V3.3.0 Serial Keyl.Q: PHP mysql_query or mysqli_query - why is the only answer the one that uses the deprecated mysql_query? PHP MySQL update query produces syntax errors in MySQL db on PHP 5.6.3. It works with MySQL 5.5.60. I am searching and trying to figure out why mysql_query with input using $mysqli->real_e scape_string(htmlspecialchars($_POST["input" ])); instead of mysqli_real_escape_string(htmls pecialchars($_POST["input"])) will fail on PHP 5.6.3. Is it because of MySQL 5.6.3 not supporting this, or is it a bug? A: A lot of people are calling the wrong method using the wrong params in the function name.

Remember you can use the mysqli functions or the mysql functions without the _query extension. mysqli_query() or mysqli_stmt_execute() mysql_query() or mysql_stmt_execute() It's also important to remember to prepend _query onto the function name to indicate which type of function it is. For example: mysql_query() will be called `mysqli_query()` under PHP 5.5. This is different from other `sql` extension methods where the `_query` suffix indicates to PHP that it is a `mysql` based function. This may make it a little bit confusing on what you should be calling if you're new to the `_query` extension or `mysql` based function. Here is a good link on how to properly call the right function based on the `$mysqli` object: [How to call correct `mysqli_*` function? Is it because of MySQL 5.6.3 not supporting this, or is it a bug? It's not a bug, it's a security update. You may want to double check that your code is actually referencing the correct `mysql_` or `mysqli_` functions. Like I said, making assumptions is dangerous. Q: Would site switching break my site? milestone for exoplanets discovery to its logical conclusion, and has found what looks like an Earth-like planet orbiting a Sun-like star. This is one of the 10,000 closest exoplanets that the group has identified. It has been four years since the first discovery of a planet orbiting an M dwarf star (stars like the sun but at the bottom of the main-sequence, cooler, and smaller). Even though these planets are not thought to be capable of harbouring life because they are too close to their host stars, we do know a lot about them.

A lot of people are working on M dwarf planets. These are all small, cool and dim. The reason for their interest is that M dwarfs are the most common stars in the Milky Way, estimated to outnumber the sun in the core of the galaxy. They are so common that stars with a mass as low as that of our sun, were on average seen around 10.5 billion years ago, or about 12.8 billion light years away. This means that the M dwarfs we see now in the nearby universe, the closest objects to our sun, represent the nearest we've found to the "Solar System". By studying these M dwarfs, we get an idea of how the nearest star systems might have looked when they were young. In another study by the same group, the scientists have also found a star with a close-in planet. This is the first time such an object has been confirmed orbiting such a star, and of the nearly 10,000 star systems in the group's study, there are only about 30 where such planets have been identified. The planet is about 30% bigger than Jupiter, and is orbiting its star every 14.7 days. But it is larger than Jupiter because it's so close to its star; in fact, we might call this a "hot Jupiter", for the reason that its planet completes one orbit every 14.7 days, and is closer to its star than Jupiter is to the sun. But although it is
