Callaway introduces the 916 drivers. These new, technology-led drivers were developed with a high performance / low spin design in mind to make the most of the sound of the new SuperFast shaft. This design philosophy is supported by aerodynamic changes which ensure that the 916 has all of the driving characteristics and feel of a traditional performance driver. Drivers Developed in Costa Rica The 916 has been developed in Costa Rica, an area renowned for its hot and humid weather conditions which demand drivers which can withstand high temperatures. The engineers at Callaway have therefore worked closely with a group of scientists in the Costa Rica meteorological station to look into climate data to identify this region's unique weather conditions. An independent climate research firm also examined the data provided to the meteorological station to establish the most suitable weather conditions for golf, and these conditions have been reflected in the 916 design. Technology & Feel The 916 features a new 12X Degree Aerodynamics Face. This is a large and deeply recessed face which helps create an extremely low swing-weight and centre of gravity and ensure good stability throughout the swing. The Face has also been reduced to a minimum and it is centrally located on the driver. This helps ensure a low centre of gravity for excellent launch conditions. It also ensures that the club has no visible centre, an excellent design for large-muscled players. The new design is supported by a low-profile two-piece shaft which incorporates an extremely light feel throughout the ball-striking zone. The technology also incorporates a new spoke design which creates a more dynamic feel through the middle and back of the club. The spoke-pattern also helps to provide grip stability. Clay, Traffic, Rough, and Course Conditions The 916 driver has been designed for all but the toughest and most challenging surfaces. It has been proven in testing on bunkers, water, rough, sand, and many other golf surfaces. The 916 has a large sweet-spot for precise control and forgiveness. It plays with extremely low spin as well as excellent distance and accuracy. Most importantly, the 916 is a forgiving and controllable driver. In this respect, it's ideal for the player who is always striving to find that shot that makes it, no matter what the conditions. Uncompromising Performance The 916 driver is a driver for the golfer who wants to maximise every single shot, and the engineers have taken this into account when designing the design. It will not
