Holding your breath is easy, keeping your records healthy is tough. Throughout your body, organs like your lungs and heart need a steady supply of oxygen. Your lungs, specifically, need to work hard and get more oxygen than they would in a pool. Having a good pair of swimming goggles is an easy way to improve your performance and protect your eyes. Your goggles should fit your face comfortably and have a clear lens with a rubber seal. Other essential features include flotation material at the bottom of the frame, nose clips to keep the strap from slipping off, and straps that are adjustable to fit your face and neck. You can't overspend when it comes to swimming goggles.

You should look for pairs that are affordable, durable, and will help you excel in the water. When purchasing goggles, make sure the lenses are clear. Many goggles have opaque lenses that reduce the clarity of the image. You may want to get a special pair of goggles for each purpose. Lightweight goggles will help you swim during the daytime and are easy to clean with regular cleaning products.

But more often than not, the world of workouts, meals and gym bags is full of wisdom. These days, there is no shortage of information about how to do a be-all and end-all. But have you considered the big, fat, negative effect these types of information can have on the progress you are making? We at After Swim learn a lot from other people's examples. That's why we've asked people like you who've made it big in their fitness goals to share their keys to success with After Swim. We hope you keep in mind that some of these tips are not exclusive. They're just helpful. A workout that moves the body and gives me an authentic sense of achievement is key to my success. I love to test my limits - the pool is my home in the summer and my retreat in the winter. It sounds cliché but I don't just like to swim because it's fun. I like it because it gets me fit and my body in shape. I also don't think I would enjoy myself if I had to dive every time. All in all, I find that working out in the pool has many advantages and, fortunately for me, I enjoy making the most out of every opportunity I get. When you have a pool at home, it is easy to throw in a couple laps every day and make your workout routine a part of your everyday
